Sermon by the "Highway and Byway" Preacher.

Chicago, Sunday, May 17, 1903. Text:—"And the Lord said unto Cain Why art thou wroth? and why is thy countenance fallen? If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door."-Gen

ERE are two brothers recognizing their obligations to the Lord Je- God asked of Cain is one which hovah, and bringing their offerings. One is accepted of God, the other is not. "And Cain was very wroth, and his countenance fell." Then it is that the Lord confronts him and asks him three questions, which lay bare his wickedness of heart, his rebellion toward God, and the reason his offering was not acceptable to God. The Lord then proceeds directly to the root of the matter (He always does when dealing with a soul), and lays the charge of sin against Cain. There is no intimation in Scripture that Cain attempted to reply to the Lord's questions or His charge against him. Like the man without the wedding garment on in the presence of the Lord, he was wicked. Who can know it?" and no speechless. If there had, Cain would tween David's awful sin and his connot have felt so bitter and trans- viction and repentance under the ferred his quarrel with God to the bold, fearless ministry of the person of his brother. But God had Prophet Nathan, there is no possilaid the charge of sin at his door bility of doubt that David sought to it. He wanted to talk of his tions. His devotions in the taberabilities as a farmer, and his faith- nacle were marked; his sacrifices fulness and steadfast habits. And there has been a long line of the descendants of Cain, which reaches to sin had pierced his heart he realized the present day; people who recognize their obligation to God and who ferings, but the heart and the life, bring their offerings, but who fail of which the offering was but the to realize the way of approach to expression. And the mistake which God and the secret of acceptance David made is one which Christians with Him. They love to dwell on the are constantly making. There is no excellencies of that which they have service which man can render to given; they compare their outward God which will blot out the stain lives with the lives of those who have of sin. The devotion of a lifetime been accepted of God through the cannot cover up the failure which

Then, when the nail-pierced hand has een placed over the sin spot and ot until then, may the offering be brought to God and be accepted. The service and devotion to God then become an expression of that acceptance with God which has already been gained through the shedding of blood. "For without the shedding of blood there is no remission." Zacchaeus, before he climbed up into the sycamore tree and met Jesus, might have given half his goods to feed the poor and restored fourfold to those from whom he had extorted unjust taxes, but it would never have gained for him the testimony of the Lord: "This day is salvation come to this house." No; but Zacchaeus, having received the Lord joyfully, gave of his substance to succor the needy and righted every wrong which he had committed as an expression of a changed and cleansed heart. If it were merely u matter of offering which made ap proach to and acceptance with God possible, then would the rich with their gifts go in first into the Kingdom of Heaven, and the widow and her two mites would be left standing at the door forgotten.

WEIGHED commercially, there is no doubt that Cain's offering equaled or even exceeded in value and in excellence that of his brother. Weighed by God, Who looked behind the offering to discover the attitude of the heart towards Him, we find that He ing of Cain, but that Abel's offering faith prompted it, faith suggested the man knows the lurking enemies kind of offering, faith showed the way to make the offering. Abel by faith knew more of the way of approach to vation was veiled in mystery, than does it showed himself a sinner, separated from God. Faith then made it plain WHAT are the terms of accept-to his heart that his offering must meet these conditions, that his offering must satisfy God's righteousness and Abels are accepted and the Cains re- mere matter of offering. to take the lamb? Go with me n. The pair stand belo them coats of skin. God must provide covering for guilty men. And so garden there sacrifice is made a testimony against sin and to point ne way of cleansing from sin. God has just said that the consequence of sin shall be death, and here is death witessed by the slain animal from which is taken the skin to cover their nakedness. As they wore those dresses of skin how they must have been a perpetual testimony to them of what death was and suggested that God would provide a way of redemption for Abel undoubtedly saw these oats of skin which the hand of God ad made for his parents. He had

d the story from their lips. He ad pondered in his heart the mysteries of which the sacrifice and the coats of skin testified, and though faintly perhaps yet most surely he realized that approach to God and acceptance with Him was through the medium of the shed blood and the burning sacrifice. And from Abel down through the long ages to the thief hanging on the cross by the side of the crucified Lord, the way of approach to God and acceptance with Him has been through the shedding of innocent blood which was consummated in the death of the perfect man Christ Jesus. Abel's faith revealed to his heart that some day he would meet his Redeemer in Paradise; the dying thief's ear of faith heard the words "This day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise." And since the plan of God was wrought out on Calvary, the way of approach to and acceptance with Him is still by way of the sacrifice made once for all for sin in Christ Jesus.
